PRESIDENT EMMANUEL AND BRIGITTE MACRON ELEGANT AND JOYFULLY WELCOMED PM NARENDRA MODI AT LOUVRE

The Republican Guard Orchestra sang many famous tunes including the Irish ballad as guests arrived and walked the red carpet. Some were accompanied by their wives, highly dressed up, with evening gowns. PM Elisabeth Borne, (whose current rumors speak of her being replaced in an upcoming reshuffle of the current government) wore a beautiful black and gold gown. The Minister of Foreign Affairs also made the effort to wear a black evening dress, which suited her very well (Rarely seen in an evening dress). The wives of economy ministers Bruno Lemaire and Gerald Darmanin, and of the Secretary General of the Elysee Palace Alexis Kohler, were all also very elegant. However, the one who dethroned all the wives was Brigitte Macron, who, smartly, wore a very chic cream-colored dress, tightened at the waist by a gray embroidered belt, matching her mini purse, also showed elegance by inviting PM Elisabeth Borne to the joiner and the two Heads of State for the family photo, at the entrance gates of the Richelieu wing of the Louvre Museum. Laurence des Cars, the first woman to lead the Louvre museum state alongside these presidential guests. During the photocall, improvised by the rare photographers and journalists present, shooting the arrivals of the guests on the red carpet with the famous pyramid of the Louvre in the background.

FRENCH ELEGANCE AND GOOD SAMARITAN ATTITUDE WITH BRUNO LEMAIRE

There was nothing weird to report, during this red carpet venue, at Louvre Museum, apart from the arrogance of a French football player of Indian origin, who did not even deign to look at the photographers, who begged him to look at the lenses of the cameras...While the officials and ministers were playing the game.

A small detail which has its importance, was the attitude of Good Samaritan on the part of Bruno Lemaire the French minister of economy and finance who assisted a guest, with reduced mobility who had trouble walking with his cane and gave up his arm busy embracing that of his wife, the time to lend his arm to this guest who is weakened in his mobility and help him to walk. Elegance and humanism, facing a disabled person, was to be remarked at this presidential banquet, along the red carpet/photocall.
